In this mid-cycle update, motion capture is the foundation of gameplay but development has also focused on improving player attributes and expanding the number of possible team-mate relationships, as well as offering new ways to customise your game in the Team Management screen. There are more than 500 unique cards available to select for your team, as well as an expanded customisation system. These cards can be used to improve and create new playable attributes, boosts, skills and your squad with inspiration cards to discover and unlock. FIFA 22 introduces the all-new "Instant Team Building" system, giving you the opportunity to customise your line-up with all-new, real-life individuals and to play the game as if they were on your squad. With the power to transfer these card players in-game, you can build a team that is instantly recognisable and entertaining to play. One of FIFA's most-requested updates, the build system is now totally hands-off. Play as you would normally - switching formations, tactics and using the Player Impact Engine (PIE) - all without having to make any manual changes. Playable attributes and boosts are supported by four new game modes, including the UEL, the addition of the Rising Star competition and new modes for U21 and FUT Champions. You'll also find a number of new features for set-piece situations, including new kicks, new attacking configurations and a moveable crossbar. Finally, minor tweaks and balance changes have been made to the refereeing. Have fun!Google’s Chrome VPN tool (Chrome Remote Desktop) made its debut to the public in July of 2014. Last week, Google rolled out an update to enhance the security and features of the app. Google said that the update took place on May 2 and security fixes and stability improvements were incorporated. The release includes new features such as Chrome Remote Desktop Password Protection, which is aimed to help prevent potential phishing attacks. Google introduced the feature in March of last year. “Password protection will encrypt all passwords for you over the wire,” the company said at the time. “This improves security by preventing intercepts like man-in-the-middle attacks, and is also intended to protect user credentials at rest on a device like your phone or computer.” When you use the Chrome Remote Desktop Password Protection, a new “encryption key” will be generated and placed on your computer, and the company will provide an URL for you to enter. Google claims that the URL helps limit credentials to your Chrome Remote Desktop sessions, and it is also said to offer significant security

"Instead of transmitting a session-specific encryption key over the network, our service generates a single random value that can be securely stored to the device and used to encrypt all future sessions using the same URL. Chrome Remote Desktop's random value is stored in a key-value store in the browser and securely written to disk," Google said in a blog post. Google said that the feature is now a 100 percent opt-in and will be "readily available" after the May 2 security update. Meanwhile, it'
