Q: Use leading 0 as substring for replace I want to replace the first 0 with a - using regular expressions in javascript. I tried using: str.replace(/\D/, "-") What I want is a leading 0 to remain. I cant use replace("0", "-") as it would treat any leading 0 as a range for back-references. A: You can replace any sequence of non-digits with '-'. To avoid replacing a string like '05' with '-', you may use a character class [0-9]* or a negated character class [^0-9]* (the first one can be substituted with [^\d]* in case you want to exclude other characters, too). var str = '123'; console.log(str.replace(/\D+/g, '-')); // -> 123- console.log(str.replace(/[^0-9]*+/g, '-')); // -> 123- Q: Воспроизведение сообщений в этом жанре Как происходит такая ситуация: я несколько раз по минуту пишу на английском языке, своими ресурсами (не сервисами Google) например. Washington — President Donald Trump made a rare return to Washington on Thursday to raise money for the Republican Party, and he used the occasion to attack Sen. Bernie Sanders, I-Vt., as a "wacky socialist." The president, who was introduced by House Majority Leader Kevin McCarthy, called Sanders a "wacky socialist" and said if he were to win the Democratic nomination, he would "wipe out" the Republican Party. "I think it would be a whole different story," Trump said of a Sanders presidency. The president also took the occasion to turn the page on his ongoing feud with former White House strategist Steve Bannon, who the president said helped his campaign so much. "They give me a lot of help," Trump told the crowd about Bannon and the RNC. "They give me a lot of good advice. They tell me where to go, they tell me what to do." The remarks, which were aimed at impressing the conservative crowd, were a sharp turn from his past criticisms of Bannon, who he has called a "loose cannon." The president was also far more reserved than he has been in the past when discussing Bannon, who the president has called "a great guy." In his morning tweet storm on Thursday, the president also said he was "glad to see" the "sloppy and disgusting" New York Times articles about himself. He also referred to an article on the front of the Wall Street Journal as "a piece of shit." Sanders, who was introduced as "100 percent American," touted his "Medicare for All" legislation and outlined his priorities to the crowd, including a $15 minimum wage and canceling college debt. "What is most disappointing is to see the Republican Party move to the far right," he said of the state of the party. "They know I would be on the side of the working families of America," he said. Sanders, an independent who describes himself as a democratic socialist, has been gaining steam among Democrats as he lines up for the nomination next year against Trump. The comments were especially surprising given how Trump has adopted Bannon's anti-socialist rhetoric. Earlier this month, Trump said that if Sanders was the nominee, then the Democratic Party would "have a lot of
