The Chicago Theatre Blog Quiet City Studio Theatre presents an exciting production of The Wizard of Oz LIVE! Directed by Joshua Lee Music composed and arranged by David Landau Photos courtesy of Tim Ahern This is a traditional adaptation of L. Frank Baum's The Wonderful Wizard of Oz, produced by the Chicago Theatre. All sets, props, and costumes are built in-house. Chicago Theatre's Executive Director, Emily Baumler, comments, "It is the first time that we are producing and starring in a fully-staged version of the musical, and the cast and crew have worked very hard to make this event a big hit!" Chicago Theatre Company's Director of Development, Andrea MacKenzie, adds, "Our goal is for this show to go to a bigger house as there are so many children in the greater Chicago area. With three productions on the bill, and a wide range of subject matter, this is a show that appeals to all." Chicago Theatre Company's Artistic Director, Nick Stefan, adds, "We loved the original book and the MGM version, so we are really excited about this. It's a brand new take on the story! It is a lot of fun, and an interesting story." This is a magical journey that arrives at a moment of crisis and decision. From the WINDING NARRATIVE IN THREE ACTS ACT I In the prologue, we learn how the land of Oz came to be. Once upon a time, long ago in a city hidden from the rest of the world, a great and powerful wizard named Oz cast a very special kind of spell. When asked why, he answered, "It's fun!" The wizard's wizardly powers were said to be so great, they could even change the nature of a person into a creature of another world – a balloon, a lion, a caterpillar, a sparrow, or a tree. However, he could only change a person's appearance for a minute or two, and only up close. Oz then cast a special spell on his own home, and it became a place where he could live happily with his lovely wife and daughter. Suddenly, the wizard receives an invitation to visit the witch of the north and travel through her Identity Abraham Joshua Heschel (1907-1972) was born in Lithuania and went on to be a rabbinical scholar and professor at Harvard Divinity School. He was also a renowned author and philosopher who wrote several books including the monumental A Treasury of Great Jewish Thoughts (1955). One of his most relevant to the topic at hand is his The Prophets: An Introduction (1956). And this was the view of the Jewish people as a whole at that time, and for the previous 1000 years. According to Heschel, the prophets were above all conciliatory figures.

Most prophetic books weren't spoken, they were written, and they were not written in order to make a point, but rather to address a need in society at that time. And this is where we arrive at the Jewish identity I mentioned earlier. The prophets didn't come with a simple message of singular justice – they came with a message of urgency and outreach. And it's not unreasonable to think that the Jews of Israel have been interpreting the message of the prophets in the same way since they first began counting themselves to see if it was valid to find themselves as a people. We've heard lots about the covenant and its history. The Jewish people and the nation of Israel have a covenant with Yahweh for good reason. It's not unreasonable to think that there is a covenant because we can do no less. Last week, we had a dear friend of ours share a brief glimpse of the covenant with us. And then, today, a dear friend of ours offered a long and heartwarming insight into the covenant. He's the brother of the guy I mentioned earlier. He met with one of his classmates who has a freeform drug addiction. The brother shared his hopes and fears with his friend. And it's at that point that his friend first considered the implications of the Jewish covenant. And it was a breakthrough moment for him. Then, he texted his friend to let him know that he's considering a career change. And the friend couldn't be more excited. Because now he finally understood what he's been missing for the past half year.Last updated on.From the section European Football Real Madrid's Cristiano Ronaldo was stretchered off with a knee injury Real Madrid president Florentino Perez has said the club may now decide to "restructure" Crist
