100% Orange Juice is the fourth game in the 100% series of visual novel-type interactive Japanese games. 100% Orange Juice takes place in Nagoya. For the sake of both sympathy and because the game is a visual novel, the player must read the dialogue to proceed and the characters' feelings will change accordingly. The player starts as a new student of an all-girls prep school. He has very little contact with girls before he starts school. Unfortunately for him, it doesn't take long until he notices a girl who has a bad eating habit, but she's a cute girl, so what's the problem with that? What the player can't seem to understand is that this girl is not your typical player character. She loves to eat and she really isn't into guys like normal girls. She's kind of strange in many ways. Just because she likes to eat and be bad about it doesn't mean she thinks a good meal is best with pepper sauce and lemons. This girl doesn't eat with people at a restaurant or with other people at a party. No, she likes to eat on her own in a quiet setting, at home. Because she loves eating in such an unusual way, her performance at school becomes very poor. And as you can guess, this isn't something you can force her to do. At the same time, the unwanted attention of all the girls at her school has become so bad, that she can't go home and eat. She starts to come to school late every day, she doesn't have time to eat breakfast. When it finally happens, she can't eat it because it brings back memories of how much she loved eating in the past, and makes her feel guilty. She starts to starve, the girl is in a very bad state. The girl's true feelings get revealed, and she will do anything to regain her health and to eat again, even if it means dying. What can I say about 100% Orange Juice that hasn't already been said about this series? 100% Orange Juice has received one of the most phenomenal user reviews for a visual novel, by a long shot. It's also one of the most successful visual novels of all time. And you know what? That's all thanks to the incredible story, the adorable characters, and the extremely addicting gameplay. 100%

Are you ready for adventure? Your old body has gone missing. You have no memories of it. You are now using an alien body that your DNA can't identify. Together with your new body, you are moving to a new home on the outskirts of town, where you are told you can start a new life. And, that's all you're told, as you're led to a new life with no idea of who you are or where you came from. What is the connection between you and your new body? It's time to find out. Whose body is it? Play a mind-bending detective adventure where your decisions dictate what you will remember and what you will not. Will you find out who you are and why this body is so important, or will you let your new life slip through your fingers... The question is... Are you ready for adventure? Show More

Q: Telerik ImageButton failing to Bind imageUrl from Control.Properties.Resources I'm using Telerik's ASP.NET MVC Telerik:RadComponents on an MVC5 application. I need to bind a string value, imageUrl, from an ImageButton and pass that to the RadDataBoundListBox control but for some reason the imageUrl from the Control.Properties.Resources is not being loaded. The value is binding correctly though, no problems there. View:
